

A word from the editor

Respected,

This issue will be a pleasant surprise for our editorial, associates, and I think, especially for those who hesitate to publish their article, when I announce that Ministry of Education, based on the quality we have achieved, categorized SANAMED as M52, and by that included our Journal among journals of national importance. Therefore, articles published in Sanamed Journal will have a higher value and prestige from now on.

If we continue at this pace, it is expected that we will reach the top of the list of prestige medical journals.

In science and creativity there is traditionally a constant game where the winner is only the one who trains all the time. If you faltet, penalties which cannot be easily replaced with new points, are inevitable. It is not enough to have strong shot in order to achieve the goal. It is important to be a good technician too, to be well coordinated, and always on the line for score. That kind of training always brings good results.

Our editorial staff chose to continue with serious work and we know the value of the support from our co-workers, experts in their particular fields, who direct us towards the common goal and to whom we are especially grateful.

Dear readers, long ago you have noticed that our journal has international character and that we are open to all authors worldwide. By analysis of the work so far, I have noticed that despite all the problems that this kind of work follows, the problem number one, unfortunately, is money. In this respect, we are relaxed, because we work voluntarily. Technical innovations, scientific discoveries, social education, are impossible without financial support. There is a paradox that only geniuses created primarily without financial motivation in order to improve world population. There are those who often were hungry, in poverty, but they left their mark and discoveries and they will never be dead. We are very small to be compared with such names, which by far was not my intention, but we have great names in the field of medicine, who, with what they do, became part of that world. Their enthusiasm, by giving their part as contribution to science and better, healthier and purer life, classified them within those people, creatures close to God. God will admit those pure souls who do not care for greed and who dedicated themselves to the service of man and preservation of health through science, transmitting knowledge to younger generations and encouraging others to create.

I am convinced in that, without a shred of doubt, when I remember the first five messages God sent to the people via His prophet:

- 1. Read, in the name of your Lord who creates,*
 - 2. Creates man from a clot!*
 - 3. Read, thy Lord is noble,*
 - 4. The One who taught by pen,*
 - 5. Who teaches a man what he did not know.*
- (SURAH XCVI, Al'-Alaq, Mekka-19 verses, Quran)*

This is a confirmation that there is nothing more sacred and pure than the learning and transmitting knowledge for the sake of future generations.

I apologize from moving away from the topic, but this has strengthen the spirit of the doctors who did not succumb to the money and, as gifted by God, were and are sympathetic to the common man.

With respect,

Prim. dr Avdo Ceranic
